A Weekly Follow-up of current stock positions

Gold Miners & Dakota Gold (DC) Update

Gold miners continue demonstrating significant accumulation as a pullback in gold stocks completes the handle to a cup-with-handle base that started in October. This week's retracement has been an orderly pullback to the Ichimoku cloud baseline above 50% of the range. The orderly pullback is supported by accumulated that has stayed strong and an incredibly resilient bullish percent index.

Last week, the gold miner's bullish percent topped at 70. This week's retracement could only move the index fractionally lower to 67.85. Staying strong indicates that gold miners' charts have remained bullish and haven't turned down, often leading to a resumption of the uptrend.

The group pullback has affected Dakota Gold (DC) as it closed under its stop. However, like the group, its accumulation has also remained incredibly strong. Therefore, I am not selling my position in Dakota Gold (DC) and will give it a couple of days to reclaim the Fibonacci support at 3.10.

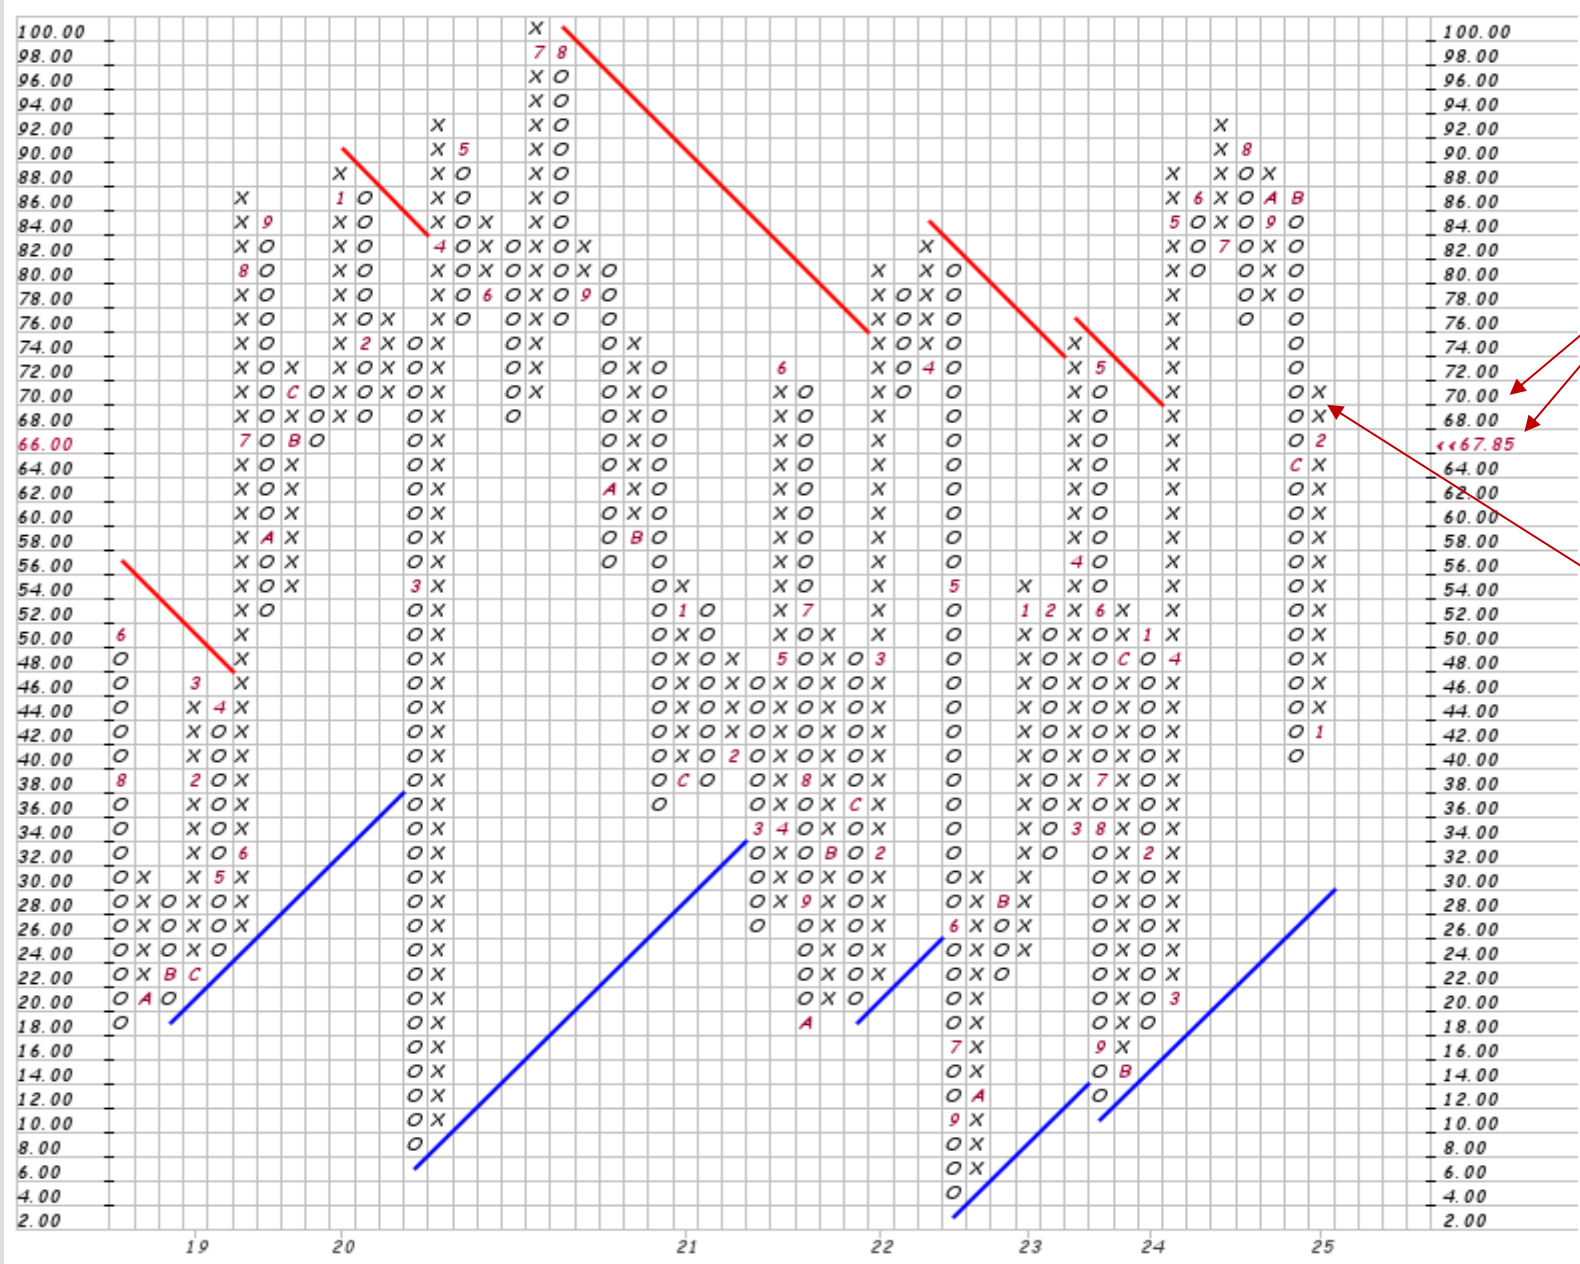

I also continue to hold the remainder of my Direxion Daily Gold Miners Bull 2x (NUGT) position and will consider reinstating a full position when I get confirmation.

Gold Miners Industry Group

Gold Miners Bullish Percent Index

The Gold Miners' Pullback has resulted in a fractional pullback in the bullish percent.

A very strong Bullish Percent Indicates higher prices
